

AUTHOR DETAILS

Jeremy L. Cox (M.A., Texas State University) will begin his doctoral studies at Penn State University. His primary research interests are critical theory, political rhetoric, media criticism, and extremist rhetoric.

Casey Malone Maugh (PhD, Pennsylvania State University, 2007) is Assistant Professor of Communication Studies at the University of Southern Mississippi, Gulf Coast. Her research interests include visual rhetoric, cultural studies, rhetorical theory and criticism, political communication and public memory studies. As a former Peace Corps volunteer, her primary research focuses on intercultural rhetorics and rhetorics of security surrounding globalization and government aid organizations.

Kristen E. Van Vonderen (M.A., University of Central Florida, 2011) is a communication professional who has research interests in media effects, particularly the impact of media on body image and eating disorders.

William Kinnally (Ph.D., Florida State University, 2008) is an Assistant Professor in the Nicholson School of Communication at the University of Central Florida. His research interests include entertainment theory and media psychology.

Kathryn Toelken (Ph.D., Wayne State University) is an Assistant Professor at the University of South Alabama where she teaches courses in the communication undergraduate and graduate programs. Dr. Toelken has worked globally in Human Resources. Prior to returning to USA, she lived in Wiesbaden, Germany where she worked in an applied organizational development setting. Her primary research interests include organizational change, organizational learning and organizational crisis, while her teaching interests include training and development, research methods, and organizational theory.